WE learn from the London Times that the report of the Meteorological Council for the year ending March 31, 1895, submitted to the President and Council of the Royal Society, has just been issued as a Parliamentary paper. Of the forecasts issued at 8:30 p. m., in the year 1894-1895, the percentage of complete success was 56, of partial success 27, of partial failure 12, and of total failure 6. The average for the ten years from 1885 to 1894 was 51.2 of complete success and 30.7 of partial success. The storm warnings show a percentage of 68.5 of success and 23.5 of partial success. The warnings not justified by subsequent weather were 6 per cent. These figures show a marked improvement on those for the years from 1885 to 1893 inclusive. The hay harvest forecasts show a total percentage of 89 of complete or partial success. The Council express their regret that the experiment of exhibiting, at telegraphic stations in rural districts every afternoon, the daily weather forecasts is not to be repeated. The net expenditure of the Council in 1894-95 was £15,212 0s. 11d., as compared with £15,969, 7s. 6d. in 1893-94. The sum of £1,528 0s. 10d., was paid to the postoffice for services rendered. The income of the Council was £15,300, granted by Parliament, and £721 19s. 6d., received from various other sources.

DISCUSSION AND CORRESPONDENCE.

HEREDITY AND INSTINCT (II.)*

IN the earlier paper I argued from certain psychological truths for the position that two general principles recently urged by Romanes for the Lamarckian, or 'inherited habit,' view of the origin of instinct do not really support that doctrine. These two principles are those cited by Romanes under the phrases respectively 'co-adaptation' and 'selective value.' In the case of complex instincts these two arguments really amount to one, i. e., as long as we are talking about the origin of instinct. And the one argument is this: that partial co-adaptations in the direction of an instinct are not of selective value; hence instinct could not have arisen by gradual
