

of the upper Yellow River, a region last traversed by foreigners many years ago, and then only with an organized caravan.

These bleak wind-torn steppes averaging 14,000 feet above sea-level are almost grassless, and take a heavy toll from such merchant caravans as venture between Jyekundo and Sining. Caravans are always heavily armed against marauding bands of Ngolok nomads, and Mr. Dolan reports a narrow escape from an engagement with such a band. The wastes are almost trackless, and for nine days the small party was lost with a failing food supply. However, an extensive survey of the animal and bird life was made for the first time, and an excellent view obtained of an almost unknown snow peak, Amnyi Machen, which, contrary to previous observers, Mr. Dolan judged to be less than 25,000 feet high and not comparable to the giants of the Himalayas.

Along the Ussu tributary of the upper Yangtze River in northeastern Tibet the expedition collected specimens of wild yak, Tibetan antelope and big-horn sheep, secured with a view to new habitat groups in the museum. Besides these, many other mammals and birds have been collected and prepared for shipment to Philadelphia.
