There is, however, an important element of biogeochemical cycles that receives no mention. In order to understand global change, to interpret change that has already been observed, or to predict change that may occur in the future, we need to know not only how much matter is in the reservoirs and how fast matter is transferred between reservoirs at present but also how the rates of transfer of matter between reservoirs depend on the state of the system. We need to know, for example, how the global rate of photosynthesis varies with the partial pressure of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere and how the global rate of decay of biomass depends on temperature and other climatic and biotic variables. Such information is not easy to come by, of course. In principle, the size of a global reservoir can be established to any degree of precision by enough measurements of concentration or amount at enough locations around the globe. Somewhat more difficult to measure are rates of exchange of material between reservoirs, but in principle, again with enough observations, global rates of exchange could be established to any necessary degree of precision. But we cannot establish global rate laws simply by making measurements on the global system. We cannot, for example, vary the concentration of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere and see how the global rate of photosynthesis varies while all other parameters of the system are held constant. Controlled global experiments simply are not possible. Rate laws must be guessed, or deduced from observations of global change, or extrapolated from local measurements. So global rate laws are poorly known and hard to know. But without knowledge of the global rate laws we cannot claim to understand how the Earth system works or to predict reliably future global change.

Because this book fails even to mention the problem of rate laws, let alone to explore their possible forms, it cannot, in my opinion, really claim to be "an analysis of global change." Nevertheless it is a very useful compendium of much of the information we will need as we strive toward an understanding of the workings of the biogeochemical system. Do not take a spin on a biogeochemical cycle without first reading Schlesinger's description of the components of that cycle.

Some Other Books of Interest

Global Catastrophes in Earth History. An Interdisciplinary Conference on Impacts, Volcanism, and Mass Mortality [Snowbird, UT, Oct. 1988]. VIRGIL L. SHARPTON and PETER D. WARD, Eds. Geological Society of America, Boulder, CO, 1991. x, 631 pp., illus. Paper, $72.50. GSA Special Paper 247.

The 1988 conference known as "Snowbird II" was a sequel to a conference held in 1981 at the same Utah ski resort devoted to the attention-getting subject of mass extinctions. Snowbird II was reported on in some detail in Science (242, 1380-82 [1988]) shortly after it was held. Now formal proceedings are available in this Geological Society of America Special Paper. The volume consists of 58 peer-reviewed papers chosen, the editors report, from 75 submissions. The papers are grouped under six headings: Patterns of Mass Mortality: Models, Overviews, and Hypotheses (11 papers, beginning with "The 'facts' of mass extinctions" by K. W. Flessa); Catastrophic Effects of Volcanism: Observations and Hypotheses (5 papers); Observations and Effects of Large-Scale Meteorite Impact (13 papers); The K/T Boundary: The Geologic Record (12 papers); The K/T Boundary: The Biological Record (13 papers); and Other Phanerozoic Extinctions (4 papers). A 15-page subject index has been added. The volume is dedicated to the late Luis Alvarez.—K.L.

Genetic and Physical Mapping. KAY E. DAVIES and SHIRLEY M. TILGHMAN, Eds. Cold Spring Harbor Laboratory Press, Cold Spring Harbor, NY, 1990. viii, 189 pp., illus. $35. Genome Analysis, vol. 1.

The new monograph series Genome Analysis, under the general editorship of Davies and Tilghman, is to consist of "short, single-theme books that review the data, methods, and ideas emerging from the study of genetic information in humans and other species" and that will serve as "an information source for junior and senior investigators." This first volume, Genetic and Physical Mapping, contains five papers: "A fluorescence in situ hybridization approach for gene mapping and the study of nuclear organization" by J. B. Lawrence; "Hybridization fingerprinting in genome mapping and sequencing" by H. Lehrach et al.; "Yeast artificial chromosomes: promises kept and pending" by P. Hieter et al.; "Germ line deletion mutations in the mouse: tools for intensive functional and physical mapping of regions of the mammalian genome" by E. M. Rinchik and L. B. Russell; and "Human DNA polymorphisms based on length variations in simple-sequence tandem repeats" by J. L. Webster. Most of the chapters open with, in lieu of abstracts in the ordinary sense, introductions that include sections with headings such as "This chapter discusses:" or "The main elements of our approach are;" and most make some reference to the Human Genome Project and its overall goals. Each has its own reference list, but a general subject index has been added. It is expected that a new volume in the series will appear "every four to six months." Projected future volumes will have as their themes chromosome structure and function, gene expression and its control, and genes and phenotypes.—K.L.

The crème has risen to the top!

We've offered you the crème de la crème of reagents for DNA and RNA synthesis for some time now. So what's new? Now, with the ABN product line and excellent support and technical service from BioGenex, we have been bizzier than ever. We now have the most complete line of chemistries for DNA and RNA synthesis including:

- RNA CED Phosphoramidites with base labile N-protection
- Modified base CED Phosphoramidites
- RAP™ Rapid Action CED Phosphoramidites

Couple these products – and new ones all the time – with our same day service, technical assistance, and competitive pricing, and you've got a honey of a deal. So give us a buzz.
